COMPLAINT

11 CIV 2387

Plaintiffs Viacom International Inc., MTV Networks, Comedy Partners, BET Holdings LLC, and Country Music Television, Inc. (collectively "Plaintiffs" or "Viacom"), by and for their Complaint against defendants Time Warner Cable Inc., Time Warner Entertainment Company L.P., and Time Warner Cable LLC (collectively "Defendants" or "TWC"), allege as follows:

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. Viacom brings this action for damages and to enjoin Time Warner Cable from resuming its unlicensed distribution of Viacom's programming through TWC's broadband service. Viacom is committed to meeting consumer demand for wireless and broadband delivery of its programming. To this end, Viacom has reached reasonable agreements with several emerging and established digital platforms so that they can stream Viacom's content and also provide an outstanding user experience. Viacom has made clear that it is willing to discuss extension of similar rights to others—including TWC. What Viacom cannot do, however, is permit one of its contracting partners, TWC, to unilaterally change the terms of its contractual relationship.

2. Viacom seeks injunctive relief and damages for TWC's breach of the parties' licensing and distribution agreements, TWC's acts of copyright infringement under the Copyright Act of 1976, as amended, 17 U.S.C. § 101 et seq., and TWC's trademark infringement and false designation of origin under the Trademark Act of 1946, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 1051, et. seq., as well as declaratory relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2201.

3. Viacom's claims arise out of TWC's March 15, 2011 launch of a computer application for Apple Inc.'s popular iPad tablet computer line of products (the "iPad App"). This application allowed subscribers of TWC's cable television services who also subscribe to TWC's broadband internet services to stream linear feeds of Viacom's copyrighted entertainment programming directly to iPad tablets in violation of Viacom's contractual rights that define and limit TWC's rights to distribute Viacom's programming, as well as Viacom's intellectual property and other rights. From March 15, 2011 until March 31, 2011, TWC unlawfully distributed Viacom's programming through the iPad App. During this period, TWC interrupted the distribution to the iPad App for a short period of time before resuming distribution of Viacom's content. On March 31, 2011, under threat of litigation, TWC again ceased such streaming of Viacom's programming. TWC, however, has refused to agree that it will not in the future once again resume its unlawful streaming of Viacom's programming, and has expressly taken the position that it has the rights to do so. As such, TWC could resume its unlicensed distribution of Viacom's programming to the iPad App at any time.

4. The purpose of this action is to (i) obtain a declaratory judgment that, under the parties agreements, Viacom has not granted TWC the rights to stream Viacom content through broadband to the iPad app and that doing so constitutes a material breach of the parties' agreements, (ii) enjoin TWC from further exploiting, without authorization, Viacom's rights in its prized copyrighted entertainment programming and world famous trademarks, and (iii) seek damages for the violations that have already occurred. Specifically, Viacom seeks to permanently enjoin TWC from further infringing Viacom's trademarks and engaging in the unauthorized distribution of Viacom's copyrighted entertainment programming to portable devices via broadband by way of the iPad App or other devices.

5. As a leading provider of entertainment programming, Viacom has had a long-standing distribution relationship with TWC, a leading cable television provider. TWC offers its customers three subscription services, two of which are relevant here — video (cable television) and high-speed data (broadband internet service). TWC customers pay monthly fees for each of the services to which they subscribe. Viacom's agreements with TWC concern only TWC's distribution of Viacom programming to TWC's cable television subscribers, and do not grant TWC the right to distribute such programming to TWC's broadband subscribers. Nevertheless, from March 15-31, 2011, TWC distributed Viacom programming to its broadband subscribers for viewing on iPads and will not agree not to do so in the future.

6. The parties' business relationship has been memorialized in a series of written agreements and amendments that define the parties' respective rights and obligations. Absent from these agreements is any grant of rights that allows TWC to stream Viacom's entertainment programming to iPad tablets or other similar portable devices via broadband, and Viacom has not otherwise authorized TWC to engage in such distribution.

7. Viacom, upon learning of the development of the iPad App, immediately contacted TWC to voice its concerns and objections to the broadband distribution of its entertainment programming via the iPad App. The parties entered into discussions and exchanged correspondence, and Viacom was informed at a meeting at TWC's offices on March 8, 2011, that TWC anticipated launching the iPad App at the end of March 2011. However, on the evening of March 14, 2011, a Senior Vice President of Content Distribution & Marketing for MTV Networks received a call from a Vice President of Corporate Programming at TWC, informing her that TWC had decided to accelerate the launch date of the iPad App to the following day and that Viacom's programming services would be included. TWC was again told that it did not have the right to distribute Viacom programming via the iPad App.

8. Nevertheless, on March 15, 2011, TWC launched the iPad App nationwide and accompanied the launch with substantial advertising and promotion that was clearly being planned for a significant period of time.

9. Upon information and belief, it is TWC's position that the distribution of Viacom's entertainment programming to TWC broadband subscribers via the iPad App is authorized under the parties' cable distribution agreements because an iPad is no different than a television. This position ignores that TWC has not obtained rights to deliver Viacom's programming via broadband, and that the parties' agreements and course of dealing make clear that Viacom has granted TWC the rights to distribute its programming only via cable. Moreover, the grant of rights restricts TWC to distribution through services regulated under Title VI of the Communications Act, and its iPad App fails to comply with Title VI. Among other things, the programming content distributed via the TWC iPad App fails to provide parental control/blocking capabilities or emergency alerts — both of which cable operators are required to provide under Title VI.

10. Unless enjoined by this Court, if TWC resumes its unlawful distribution of Viacom's content, then the iPad App will result in substantial and irreparable injury to Viacom that is not fully compensable in money damages. Among other things, TWC's actions will and already have interfered with Viacom's opportunities to license content to third-party broadband providers and to successfully distribute programming on its own broadband delivery sites. Viacom also will be deprived of control over the broadband distribution of its video programming signals, copyrighted programming and related trademarks, opportunities to license content over new media, the ability to track viewership of its entertainment programming by TWC iPad App users, and the ability to ensure the quality of the signal relaying its entertainment programming to users of the iPad App.

11. Accordingly, Viacom asks that the Court permanently enjoin TWC's unlawful conduct and award Viacom damages arising out of TWC's unlawful conduct.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

In addition, plaintiffs Viacom International Inc. and Comedy Partners have their respective principal places of business in New York and in this District, and have been injured in New York by TWC's infringing conduct.

FACTS

Plaintiffs' Businesses

25. Viacom is among the world's leading creators, producers and distributors of copyrighted television programming and other entertainment programming, all of which are marketed and promoted under Viacom's world famous trademarks. Viacom has invested and continues to invest many millions of dollars annually to create and disseminate its entertainment programming to the millions upon millions of consumers who desire to experience the original works it creates. Viacom's economic incentive to continue to invest substantial amounts of money is protected by contractual arrangements which confer defined and limited rights on authorized distributors and also is furthered by the protections afforded by the copyright and trademark laws.

26. Viacom provides its entertainment programming across a variety of platforms, including television, motion pictures and digital media, through many of the world's best known entertainment brands. Viacom's entertainment programming, which is marketed and promoted under some of the most recognizable trademarks in the world, reaches over 578 million households worldwide via its approximately 165 channels and multiplatform properties, which include MTV, MTV2, mtvU, MTV Tr3s, VH1, VH1 Classic, CMT, Logo, Nickelodeon/Nick at Nite, Nick Jr. (formerly, Noggin), Teen Nick (formerly, The N), Nicktoons Networks, BET, Comedy Central, Spike TV, and TV Land, among others.

27. Viacom distributes and publicly performs its entertainment programming, and/or licenses the distribution and/or public performance of such works, by telecast on cable and satellite television systems, through its own internet websites, such as www.comedycentral.com and www.mtv.com, and various authorized internet distribution channels, such as Hulu and Netflix, and over cell phones and other portable devices, among other ways.

28. Examples of authorized broadband distribution of Viacom's entertainment programming include Apple's iTunes Music Store, which sells secure digital downloads of television shows from several of Viacom's television networks and streaming services such as Hulu and Netflix. The programming distributed through these licensed on-line broadband distribution channels include "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart," "The Colbert Report," and "South Park" from Comedy Central; "SpongeBob SquarePants," and "Dora the Explorer," among others, from Nickelodeon; and "Beavis and Butthead" and "Laguna Beach," among others, from MTV.

29. Viacom's ability to create the cable television programming its audiences love is dependent on two principal revenue streams that form its core business model: (i) "affiliation fees" or other consideration from cable, satellite and telephone companies who sell television programming services directly to consumers and (ii) advertising sold to national accounts.

Viacom's principal revenue source, however, in its largest sector — cable networks — is advertising sales. Many of the world's leading consumer product and/or service companies advertise on Viacom's television networks and internet websites, including Proctor & Gamble, Coca Cola, and General Motors.

30. The income Viacom generates through the sale of most of its advertising is largely dependent on the number of viewers of its entertainment programming as recorded by the industry-standard audience measurement service, Nielsen Media Research ("Nielsen"). Using electronic monitoring technology, Nielsen provides advertisers with information regarding the viewership volume and demographics of particular television programs. As is well understood in the media industry, this information plays an integral role in the determination of the value of advertising space on Viacom's television networks.

31. Viacom generally negotiates the rates for advertising time with national advertisers on a "CPM" or cost per thousand viewers basis. Therefore, the rates for these advertisements depend largely on the projected audience size, which in some cases Viacom guarantees to its advertisers. In order to estimate audience size and measure its delivery of the guaranteed audience size, Viacom and the companies wishing to purchase advertising time rely heavily on the Nielsen ratings. Indeed, Nielsen reports that "[i]n the United States ... broadcasters and cable networks use our television audience ratings as the primary currency to establish the value of their airtime. . . . Advertisers use this information to plan television advertising campaigns, evaluate the effectiveness of their commercial messages and negotiate advertising rates." Nielsen 2010 Annual Report.

32. In addition to the use of ratings to set base advertising rates, cable television advertising deals often also include guarantees to the advertiser that a certain audience size (measured by ratings) will be delivered for a program in which the advertiser's commercial will run. If the programming under-delivers in ratings, Viacom pays a penalty to the advertiser in the form of reimbursement for a portion of the price paid for an advertisement or free future advertising time known as "make-goods" or audience deficiency units.

33. The Nielsen ratings are also the key metric that Viacom uses in making decisions about its programming. The daily Nielsen reports sent to Viacom set forth not only how many people watch each program, but also who watches each program (i.e., teenage girls, 18-24 year old men, etc.). Viacom bases its decisions about whether to continue programs or stop making new episodes on the audience size metric provided by Nielsen. Viacom also relies on the Nielsen ratings to make scheduling decisions. For example, if the Nielsen ratings show that the viewers of a certain program are mostly female, Viacom may use that information to schedule another program viewed primarily by females in the following time slot.

34. Upon information and belief, Nielsen does not currently measure the broadband streaming of television programming on portable devices, such as iPad tablets, and will not be in a position to do so for a substantial period of time.

Defendants' Businesses

35. TWC offers three subscription services to its customers (i) video, (ii) high-speed data, and (iii) voice. TWC's video (cable television) and high-speed data (broadband internet) services are sold separately to subscribers and are described as separate services on TWC's website and in TWC's 2010 Annual Report comprising different categories of income.

36. TWC's 2010 Annual Report states that TWC's 12.3 million residential cable television subscribers pay a fixed monthly fee for video services that include On-Demand, high-definition and digital video recorder services.

37. On the other hand, TWC's 2010 Annual Report states that TWC's 9.5 million residential broadband customers pay a monthly fee for a connection to the internet. The monthly fee charged to TWC's broadband customers is entirely distinct from the fee paid by TWC's cable television subscribers for television content.

The Agreements Between Viacom and TWC

38. Viacom and TWC have had a long-standing relationship whereby Viacom non-exclusively licenses its entertainment programming content to TWC for distribution to its cable subscribers in exchange for monthly licensing fees based on the number of subscribers. This relationship has been memorialized in a series of written agreements entered into by the parties.

39. TWC's broadband distribution of Viacom's entertainment programming through the TWC iPad App is not authorized in the parties' agreements or elsewhere and thus exceeds the scope of the distribution rights granted thereunder.

The Core Agreement

40. On August 10, 2000, MTV Networks ("MTVN") and TWC entered into an affiliation agreement (the "Core Agreement"), in which MTVN granted TWC the rights to distribute "via cable" certain television programming to TWC's cable subscribers:

Grant of Rights. During the term of this Agreement, [MTVN] hereby grants to [TWC], and [TWC] hereby accepts from [MTVN], the non-exclusive right, and to the extent set forth herein, the obligation, for Time Warner Cable Systems to exhibit and distribute the Services in an analog format...to any person in an Operating Area....

Core Agreement, Section 2(a) (emphasis added). "Time Warner Cable Systems" is defined in the Core Agreement as follows:

each cable television system located in the Territory providing cable television program services to consumers via cable, pursuant to Title VI, and as defined in Section 602(7), of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, a satellite master antenna television system ('SMATV'), a multichannel multipoint distribution service ('MMDS'), or a microwave distribution service ('MDS')....

Core Agreement, Section 1(a) (emphasis added).

41. The Core Agreement further provides that TWC may only receive the signal feed carrying the licensed programming by MTVN Satellite or through a third-party authorized by MTVN, and TWC may not re-transmit that signal via satellite or microwave or other wireless transmission method. Core Agreement, Section 5(a).

42. MTVN's grant of cable rights to TWC has never been amended to allow TWC to retransmit programming to TWC subscribers by broadband to portable electronic devices such as an iPad.

43. Additionally, the Core Agreement prohibits TWC, in transmitting the signal for the MTVN channels to subscribers, from "materially degrad[ing], or materially and adversely perceptually interfer[ing] with, the principal picture quality or the audio quality of any of the Services' signal from a reasonable viewer's perspective." Core Agreement, Section 4(c).

44. These provisions clearly show that MTVN has granted TWC the right to distribute programming, via cable, to TWC's customers who subscribe to cable television services and not over any other services TWC provides, such as broadband. This agreement has never been modified to permit TWC to distribute MTVN's entertainment programming via broadband to portable electronic devices such as iPads. This central facet of the contractual relationship among the parties has never been amended. And it cannot be implied by anything else not the least because the Reservation of Rights Clause in the governing Core Agreement still in effect says "[TWC] shall not use, or authorize the use of or cause the use of, any of the Services in any manner unless expressly authorized by the terms and conditions of this Agreement." Core Agreement, Section 5(h)(vi) (emphasis added).

45. The Reservation of Rights Clause in the Core Agreement is a material term. Like TWC's new broadband service, each new form of distribution raises a variety of issues, both technical and marketplace, and MTVN has reserved for itself the ability to evaluate changing circumstances prior to making a grant of rights to TWC.

The Comedy Central Agreement

46. On April 23, 2003, MTVN and Comedy Partners entered into a separate agreement with TWC for distribution rights for Comedy Central (the "Comedy Central Agreement").

47. The Comedy Central Agreement, like the Core Agreement, limits TWC's distribution right to cable television systems, satellite master antenna television systems ("SMATV"), multipoint distribution services ("MDS"), and multichannel multipoint distribution services ("MMDS"). Comedy Central Agreement, Section 1(a).

48. The Comedy Central Agreement contains the same prohibition on retransmission of the signal, the same prohibition on degrading or interfering with the principal picture quality or the audio quality when transmitting the signal, and the same reservation of rights provision contained in the Core Agreement.

49. The Comedy Central Agreement has never been modified to permit TWC to distribute Comedy Central's content to portable electronic devices such as iPads.

The Legacy Agreements

50. Over the years, TWC also entered into agreements with then-unaffiliated cable television programming providers Country Music Television, Inc. (the "CMT Agreement") and Black Entertainment Television, Inc. (the "BET Agreement") (collectively the "Legacy Agreements"). The unaffiliated cable television programming providers were later acquired by Viacom International, and the Legacy Agreements were collectively amended through subsequent agreements between Viacom and TWC.

51. None of the Legacy Agreements expands TWC's grant of rights to authorize the broadband distribution of Viacom's entertainment programming to portable electronic devices such as iPads.

52. Furthermore, the Legacy Agreements, like the Core Agreement and the Comedy Central Agreement, forbid TWC from reproducing the programming covered by those agreements without prior written authorization. The Legacy Agreements also forbid TWC from materially degrading or interfering with BET or CMT's signal when distributing the BET and CMT channels to subscribers.

53. The Core Agreement, the Comedy Central Agreement and the Legacy Agreements are hereinafter referred to collectively as the ("Agreements").

Subsequent Amendments to the Agreements

54. Subsequent to entering into the Agreements, prior to the launch of the iPad App, and consistent with the limited nature of the rights grants, whenever TWC sought to expand the scope of its rights to distribute Viacom programming via cable television services under the Agreements, including to accommodate new technology, TWC and Viacom negotiated and entered into a signed written amendment to the Agreements, or a separate agreement. By way of example, the parties have negotiated for TWC to provide "Start Over" technology to subscribers viewing licensed Viacom programming on cable television. Start Over technology allows viewers to restart a program that is in progress at any time while the program is airing. Among other things, TWC also negotiated for the right to offer Viacom programming on its video on demand platform. TWC also negotiated the right to distribute the high definition feeds of specific Viacom programming services (the "HD Feeds") to its cable subscribers. The HD Feeds have been converted by Viacom to a high definition format which materially enhances picture quality. Viacom received additional consideration from TWC for each additional right granted under the amendments.

55. Each time TWC's rights to distribute Viacom programming to its cable subscribers were changed or expanded, the new distribution and licensing rights were fully and specifically defined by the parties. Moreover, with one very narrow exception discussed below, each amendment involved a change to its licensing and distribution rights within the cable television services TWC provided to its cable television subscribers, not an extension of rights to distribute Viacom's programming by broadband.

56. The only time the parties contemplated any broadband services in the Agreements, the broadband rights were limited to distributing broadband content (as opposed to cable television content) via TWC's broadband services. Even in this limited circumstance, Viacom ensured that the right was extremely narrow and was limited to three specific offerings:

MTVN shall grant to TWC the right to distribute, and allow its cable operator affiliates to distribute, via TWC's high speed broadband service as described in Section 3(n)(iii) of this Second Amendment, NickArcade (access to downloadable paid games), Urge Digital Music Service (provided such service is owned and operated by MTVN), and MyNoggin (broadband pre-school edutainment service) as described in the July 26, 2006 presentation made by MTVN to TWC (the "MTVN Broadband Content") under the most favorable terms and conditions that are applicable to any individual third party distributor of the MTVN Broadband Content, subject to TWC's agreement to comply with any terms and conditions directly related to distribution of the MTVN Broadband Content with which such other individual third party distributor is required to comply in order to obtain such favorable terms and conditions.

Second Amendment to the Agreements, Section 10(e).

57. Viacom has never granted any expansive broadband wireless distribution rights to TWC.

58. Indeed, in 2004, when Viacom and TWC agreed to launch co-branded websites displaying some of Viacom's content, TWC's role was explicitly limited to including its brand on websites exclusively controlled by Viacom. The relevant contract provision states that Viacom (and not TWC) had the right to "develop, host and provide content for the co-branded microsite(s)" and that Viacom "maintain[ed] creative control over the content, design and format of the co-branded microsites which may include such elements as links, text, multimedia, streaming video and associated icons and/or graphics." Thus, far from granting TWC rights to distribute Viacom content via its broadband service, Viacom agreed only to allow TWC to include its name on a website controlled by Viacom.

59. Now, contrary to the prior course of conduct between the parties, and despite the fact that TWC's distribution of the Viacom programming to iPads is far more expansive than any distribution rights TWC has negotiated for in the past, TWC, instead of negotiating with Viacom for such rights, simply launched the iPad App with Viacom content, and made it available to TWC's broadband customers.

Viacom's Intellectual Property

60. Among Viacom's most important assets are the intellectual property rights that it owns and licenses in connection with its original entertainment programming.

The Viacom Copyrights

61. Viacom is the legal or beneficial owner of the copyrights in numerous programs that have been, or will be, exhibited over cable television and a variety of other media outlets. A non-exhaustive list of such television programs, identifying representative examples of programs in which Viacom (and/or its subsidiaries or affiliates) own the pertinent copyright interests (the "Copyrighted Programs"), is set forth in Exhibit A attached hereto.

62. Each such Copyrighted Program is an original audiovisual work that has been or will be fixed in a tangible medium of expression and constitutes copyrightable subject matter within the meaning of Section 102 of the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C. § 102. In addition, each such Copyrighted Program has been or will be registered with the United States Copyright Office or is the subject of an application for registration filed with the Copyright Office. Representative examples of the copyright registration certificates or other documentation demonstrating compliance with Sections 408(f) and 411 of the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C. §§ 408(f) & 411, and implementing Copyright Office regulations, corresponding to the Copyrighted Programs identified in Exhibit A, are attached hereto as Exhibit B.

63. Under Section 106 of the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C. § 106, Viacom owns the exclusive rights, among others, to reproduce and copy its copyrighted works, to distribute copies to the public of its copyrighted works, to publicly perform its copyrighted works, to publicly display its copyrighted works, and to make derivative works based upon its copyrighted works.

64. Except as explicitly authorized in the parties' Agreements, neither Viacom nor any other person authorized by Viacom has granted any license, permission or authorization to TWC to exercise any of the rights set forth above or to authorize others to exercise such rights, with respect to the Copyrighted Programs or any other works in which Viacom (and/or its subsidiaries or affiliates) own copyrights.

65. The agreements do not authorize TWC's broadband distribution of Viacom's entertainment programming, including, without limitation, the Copyrighted Programs, to portable electronic devices, such as iPads.

The Viacom Trademarks

66. Viacom is the legal or beneficial owner of numerous trade and service marks that it uses on and in connection with a wide variety of services and goods, including, but not limited to, entertainment programming and various consumer products, as well as the marketing and promotion of such services and goods, in interstate commerce throughout the United States and the world.

67. Among the trade and service marks owned and used by Viacom, are the following which are the subject of registrations on the Principal Register of the United States Patent and Trademark Office:

68. The foregoing Viacom service marks (hereinafter, the “Viacom Marks”) are in full force and effect, and many have achieved incontestable status pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1065. Copies of the registration certificates for the Viacom Marks are attached hereto as Exhibit C.

69. In addition to being, in and of themselves, highly distinctive marks and designs, as a result of Viacom’s uninterrupted and continuing use of the Viacom Marks on and in connection with a wide variety of services and goods, the Viacom Marks have acquired distinctiveness, and have developed a strong secondary meaning among consumers and the trade. Accordingly, the Viacom Marks immediately identify Viacom as the exclusive source of services and goods bearing the Viacom Marks, and signify goodwill of incalculable value.

Defendant’s Unlawful Conduct

70. On March 14, 2011, Viacom learned that TWC planned to launch the TWC iPad App the very next day, allowing TWC’s customers who subscribe both to TWC’s cable television services and to its broadband services to access Viacom’s MTV, VH1, Nickelodeon, BET, CMT, Comedy Central and Spike TV video programming networks via iPad tablets.

71. On March 15, 2011, TWC launched the TWC iPad App with a very well developed marketing blitz, including email “blasts” to TWC’s cable and broadband subscribers, print, television and other media advertising, and even chalked advertising on sidewalks in New York City. TWC launched the iPad App with access to Viacom’s content despite Viacom’s express objections and the absence of any grant of rights authorizing TWC to engage in such distribution under the Agreements.

72. On information and belief, in order to distribute content to iPads, TWC converts the signal it receives from content providers, such as Viacom, into a different format at lower bitrates (i.e., lower transmission speeds) and at reduced quality. As a result, viewers who have downloaded the iPad App (and who subscribe to both TWC’s cable services and TWC’s broadband services) receive two separate signals into their homes. One signal — the cable television signal — is formatted for traditional cable television and is sent to the set-top box. The other signal — the broadband signal — is formatted using internet protocol and is sent to the cable modem for transmission via wireless router to the iPad.

73. Despite Viacom’s unequivocal objection to TWC’s broadband distribution of Viacom programming via the iPad App, TWC’s marketing and promotional materials for the iPad App launch featured some of the most valuable and recognizable Viacom Marks. Such unauthorized use of the Viacom Marks created, and will continue to create if TWC resumes its unlicensed distribution of Viacom content, the false and misleading impression that Viacom has authorized and/or sponsored TWC’s broadband distribution of Viacom programming via the iPad App.

74. Viacom, upon receiving confirmation of the launch of the TWC iPad App, immediately wrote to TWC to demand that it cease and desist from distributing Viacom’s entertainment programming via the iPad App. TWC subsequently informed Viacom that it declined to accede to Viacom's demand and, from March 15, 2011 until March 31, 2011, TWC unlawfully distributed Viacom's programming through the iPad App. During this period, TWC interrupted the distribution to the iPad App for a short period of time before resuming distribution of Viacom's content. On March 31, 2011, under threat of litigation, TWC again ceased such streaming of Viacom's programming. TWC, however, has refused to agree that it will not in the future resume its unlawful streaming of Viacom's programming, and has taken the position that it has the rights to do so. As such, TWC could resume its unlicensed distribution of Viacom's programming to the iPad App at any time.

75. TWC's unauthorized broadband distribution of Viacom's entertainment programming via the TWC iPad App constituted a material breach of the parties' long-standing distribution relationship and a direct infringement of the Copyrighted Programs and Viacom Marks.

Viacom's Harm

76. TWC's unilateral launch of the iPad App and the unauthorized broadband distribution of Viacom's content caused Viacom significant harm and, if TWC resumes its unlawful distribution of Viacom content, will continue to cause harm to Viacom, including irreparable harm not fully compensable in money damages.

77. The unauthorized broadband distribution of Viacom programming via the iPad App has significantly harmed Viacom's ability to sell its entertainment programming to TWC, to sell its entertainment programming to third-party broadband distributors and to develop its own broadband services.

78. Selling the content of its networks to broadband providers is a vital component of Viacom's future business plan. The unauthorized broadband distribution of Viacom's entertainment programming via the iPad App has seriously impacted the viability of that business potential. Third party broadband distributors have negotiated for the right to distribute Viacom's content in the broadband market, agreed to pay a significant licensing fee to Viacom and guaranteed Viacom a significant amount in advertising revenue. By distributing Viacom's content to iPads without authorization, TWC has secured a competitive advantage over these broadband distributors who negotiated in good faith. As such, TWC has compromised Viacom's ability to enter into future contracts for the right to distribute Viacom's content in the highly innovative and growing broadband market.

79. Furthermore, upon information and belief, the iPad App materially degrades, and/or materially and adversely perceptually interferes with, the principal picture quality or the audio quality of Viacom's entertainment programming, which in turn dilutes the value of such programming and tarnishes the Viacom Marks under which these inferior services are provided to TWC's subscribers.

80. In addition, it is unclear how TWC is securing the broadband content distributed to iPad users via the iPad App — and particularly, how it will ensure that the content is only accessed by actual TWC cable television and broadband subscribers. A lack of security in TWC's distribution of Viacom content poses risks to Viacom and further undermines Viacom's business model.

81. Finally, as explained above, Nielsen does not track iPad viewership of entertainment programming. This is of tremendous significance because Viacom relies on the Nielsen ratings to sell its advertising time on its networks, and the greater the audience size, the greater the market value of the advertising time. Any future unauthorized broadband distribution of Viacom programming via the iPad App could potentially result in a significant reduction of the trackable viewership of Viacom's entertainment programming, thereby harming Viacom's advertising-supported business model in ways which may be difficult to measure.

82. Moreover, Viacom often guarantees its advertisers an estimated minimum Nielsen viewership rating. If Nielsen subsequently reports lower viewership than that which was guaranteed, Viacom is required to reimburse the advertiser and/or provide additional advertising time, at no charge, to that advertiser. Thus, upon information and belief, any future unauthorized broadband distribution of Viacom programming via the TWC iPad App will harm Viacom's advertising revenues.

83. Viacom also relies on accurate Nielsen ratings to make important business decisions about programming. As discussed above, Viacom uses the Nielsen ratings to make key decisions about programming and scheduling. Any future undercounting of Viacom's viewers would greatly harm Viacom's ability to make crucial business decisions about its most important asset — its programs.

84. For the foregoing reasons, TWC's unauthorized broadband distribution of Viacom's entertainment programming via the iPad App constitutes, and any such distribution in the future would constitute a material breach of the parties' Agreements, and an infringement of Viacom's intellectual property rights, that have and would continue to cause immeasurable harm to Viacom.

CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

COUNT I
(Declaratory Judgment)

85. The allegations set forth in paragraphs 1 through 84 hereof are adopted and incorporated by reference as if fully set forth herein.

86. There is an actual controversy between Viacom and TWC concerning TWC's rights under the Agreements to distribute Viacom's entertainment programming to portable devices via broadband by way of the iPad App or other devices.

87. As set forth more fully above, Viacom's Agreements with TWC relate only to TWC's distribution of Viacom programming to TWC's cable television subscribers, and do not grant TWC the right to distribute such programming via broadband.

88. Upon information and belief, TWC contends that the Agreements grant it the rights to distribute Viacom content via broadband to portable devices such as the iPad. Indeed, on March 31, 2011, TWC issued the following press release making clear that an actual justiciable controversy exists between the parties. In the press release TWC stated "[w]e believe we have every right to carry the programming on our iPad app" and "[w]e will pursue all of our legal rights against the programmers."

89. Viacom is entitled to a declaration that Viacom's Agreements with TWC relate only to TWC's distribution of Viacom programming to TWC's cable television subscribers, and do not grant TWC the right to distribute such programming via broadband.

affiliation, connection, association or endorsement of the iPad App and the unauthorized broadband distribution of Viacom's programming that it facilitates.

184. Upon information and belief, TWC has acted with knowledge of TWC's ownership of the Viacom Marks, and with the deliberate intention to unfairly benefit from the incalculable goodwill symbolized by the Viacom Marks.

187. Upon information and belief, by its willful acts, TWC has made and in the future may continue to make substantial profits and gains to which it is not in law or in equity entitled.

188. Upon information and belief, TWC's acts have caused and may in the future continue to cause irreparable harm to Viacom, and Viacom has no adequate remedy at law.
